In the News The Financial Post reports in its Tuesday, March 26, edition that Crescent Point Energy is changing its name to VerenInc. The Post s Chris Varcoe writes that Crescent Point chief executive officer Craig Bryksa said in aninterview. There s nothing wrong with the name. It was a great name and a great company and had a good history. For us, we ve completely transformed the organization into a different business. ... It s time fora new name. At the company s investor day meeting in Calgary this week, Mr. Bryksa announced the move and explained Veren combines the Latin word veritas, meaning truth, withenergy. If approved by shareholders in May, the business will also adopt a new ticker symbol and a new logo a circle with three colourful bursts inside that form the letter V. Mr. Bryksa added. You go througha series of different names and what fits and what doesn t. So that swere truth and energy (came from),for what we built. We really likethe name. The Post says Crescent Point Energy has been busy remaking itself since Mr. Bryksa took over from CEO Scott Saxberg in 2018. Former analyst William Lacey said on X,The Crescent Point name change to Veren is giving me serious Ovintiv vibes.
